

Envision Your Love of Video Games as a Career

Video games are a thriving industry, and you may be one of many who enjoy the excitement that video games bring. But, if your love of video games has sparked your technical creativity, the best career to consider is as a game developer. Alternatively, there are opportunities for less tech-savvy businesses that will allow you to earn an income from video games as a career.

What Skills Are Required for Game Developers

The average salary of a programmer is $95,300, and it's a fast-paced, high-pressure job. For video games as a career, a game developer does much more than write code; it involves understanding the designer's concepts and making them a reality. Sometimes, you will contribute to the storyline, create prototypes, debug and troubleshoot and quality control. Some critical skills required to be an accomplished game developer:

- Programming/Coding Skills
- Creativity
- Storytelling
- Problem-Solving
- Time Management
- Communication

Do I Need a Degree To Be a Game Developer?

The chances of your success improve if you obtain your skills with an online degree. A computer science degree requires you to learn several programming languages. In addition, you will establish other core skills such as physics, computer algorithms, and data analysis. While a bachelor's degree is good enough to get you an entry-level position, more evolved job roles will require an advanced degree. A coding boot camp is an intense training program that teaches many skills that college does not. Employers with a high demand for programmers tend to accept a Bootcamp certificate.

How Do I Get My Foot in the Door?

Many top gaming companies concur they hire based on referrals, so establishing solid connections with people in the industry and finding a mentor may be the most important things you can do to find employment. In addition, building your portfolio by joining a smaller, independent company will look good on your resume and show off your skills. Finally, joining meetups and other community resources will help your quest toward a career in video games.

Ways To Earn in Video Games as a Career

Producing a podcast, YouTube channel, or blog can generate revenue if you have a large enough audience. Other than entertaining others with your gaming prowess and expertise, there are several other ways to earn by playing video games. Here are some of them:

1. Quality Assurance (QA) tester: You're gaming to detect and report on technical issues, such as bugs and anything that disrupts gameplay.
2. Game tester: When you play the game, provide valuable feedback that enhances the user experience.
3. Creating game guides and walkthroughs: You help people navigate all aspects of gameplay. Your guides can be in video or website formats.
4. Professional player: You play in tournaments for prizes and sponsorship.
5. Gaming coach: Evaluating other gamer's techniques and providing advice and tips on improving play.
6. Video game journalist: Report on industry trends, interview key figures in the industry, reviews and other aspects of the gaming world.

Earning money through these outlets often takes time and patience while you grow your audience and gain recognition in the gaming community. You may need to work across several social media platforms, be organized, and determine the needs of your target audience.

Registering Your Video Gaming Business

If you earn an income from playing video games, you must register your business for tax reasons. However, consider registering as a Limited Liability Corporation for several reasons instead of filing as another entity.

- An LLC can lend credibility.
- An LLC is simpler than other business entities.
- Filing your taxes has flexible options.
- Costs are lower.
- You have liability protection.

Register an LLC using a more affordable professional service than lawyers, or file it yourself. However, recognize that regulations differ by state, so you need to research by your location.

Congratulations on Your Gaming Business

You can also delve into the world of developing games and being one of the creators behind the game itself. Or you can profit from playing. So, if your passion is gaming, live the dream and explore the possibilities of gaming for profit. Register your LLC at <Business Registration Co.> to get started.